Great New Heavyweights for HO Passenger Operations

Departure time is fast approaching as inspectors make a last check of the Pullmans in today's train. The station will soon be a beehive of action, as cabs and cars arrive with passengers. Sporting two new Pullman paint schemes and factory-installed grab irons, this latest run of heavyweights (see details on page 4) will be right at home on long-distance passenger runs, and are shown in front of the Cornerstone Series City Station.

HO Cornerstone Series® City Station - Kit
This depot is based on a prototype structure at Wausau, Wisconsin, but is typical of larger, fancier stations built throughout the US. In addition to standard features like the agent's bay window and waiting room, this building boasts a covered end platform and an attached baggage room. It's perfect for serving steam-era heavyweights or diesel-era streamliners. 17-5/8 x 5-7/8 x 4-3/8" 44 x 14.6 x 10.9cm
933-2904 City Station

ON THE COVER

With a friendly wave, the operator of this busy tower speeds another train safely on its way. Long before instant communications and micro-electronics, towers like this were a key part of railroad operations, controlling signals and switches at important junctions, busy yards and crossings with other railroads. Modeling this kind of action on your HO line is easy with the new Pennsylvania Block and Interlocking Tower (933-2982, shown on page 8) and colorful period equipment like the new Walthers Platinum Line™ 50' Automobile Boxcars (932-41652 series).

Don't miss Model Railroader's new 5-part series!

Follow along as the editors of Model Railroader magazine build a 4 x 8 HO scale layout based on the coal-hauling Virginia Railway set in the 1950s.

This 5-part series begins in the January 2012 issue and covers:

- The basics of getting started in model railroading
- Building a station scene that folds out of the way when not in use
- Kitbashing and scratchbuilding structures
- Painting and decaling advanced steam locomotives
- Working with rocks made from foam rubber
- Operating a model railroad realistically
- And much more!

Purchase a copy at your nearest hobby shop today!

New Cars to Expand Streamliner Service

Add realistic color and variety to your HO streamliners with Walthers passenger cars! Based on equipment used from the 1950s to the early years of Amtrak, you can easily mix and match styles and roadnames to build a custom train for your layout or collection.

Each comes ready for service, with factory-installed grab irons, superb paint and lettering, turned metal RP-25 wheelsets, Proto MAX™ metal knuckle couplers and much more.

- Fully Assembled – Factory-Installed Grab Irons & More
- Wide Selection of Car Types
- Classic 50s through 70s Prototypes
- Painted & Lettered for Popular Roads
- Now In Stock!

Did You Know?

For many decades, one of the most useful tools on a railroad was nothing more than a sturdy wooden pole! Used to shove cars on adjacent tracks, the ends of the pole were placed in special brackets on the lower end corners of cars and locos, known as "poling pockets."

While it saved time and was a very common practice, "poling" was also very dangerous since the poles could easily come loose or break without warning.

Most roads banned it by the 1970s, and new equipment was built without the special pockets.

Did You Know?

Factory-painted figures can become more realistic in just a few seconds with a little paint!

Make a very thin wash of black or gray (mix your paint with thinner or water as appropriate), and let it flow or "wash" over the entire figure. When it dries, this will tone down the colors and accent all of the molded details.

A coat of flat finish applied with a brush or spray will also make all of the colors, from skin tones to clothing, more subdued and realistic.

Did You Know?
 Probably the most common signal found on railroads large and small is the railroad crossbuck.

It's familiar X shape has been protecting highway crossings for over a century now, making them a must-have detail for model railroads too.

At one time, each state regulated it's own signs, specifying the shape, colors and warning message. Today, the signs are standardized, but are slowly being updated with more reflective surfaces and Yield signs.
