READY FOR CITY SERVICE

Summer vacation, winter getaway, special event, business trip, family reunion, holiday get-together... whatever the reason, Union Pacific had to be ready to meet the needs of travelers every day.

Customized Consists

Each City Streamliner was assigned a regular mix of cars to handle ridership on a typical day, whether headed east or west. When demand grew beyond what was normally available, particularly for sleeping cars with a fixed number of accommodations, additional cars had to be added.

Initially, some car types were limited to a specific train to maintain more luxurious service levels. During the late 1950s for example, the City of San Francisco was assigned one Imperial 4-4-2 sleeper, but might carry as many as three, while the City of Los Angeles could have as up to four Pacific 10-6 sleepers.

But UP's equipment pools made it easier to share cars, so it wasn't unusual to see several cars from the same series, such as the Placid 11 Double Bedroom sleepers, on more than one train on any given day. This practice became more common into the 1960s as trains were combined and consists grew longer.

By the 1970s, UP was operating one gigantic train dubbed the City of Everywhere by modelers and railfans. Often running with 20 or more cars (UP set a limit of 27 per train), it was gradually split into sections that were routed to cities along the way. On occasion, a second diner was sometimes added to prevent on-board services from being stretched too thin!

Mix & Match Models

Based on 14 authentic cars used in the various City Streamliners, Walthers makes it easy to model assigned or expanded consists in HO Scale. Each car is complete with name or number decals as appropriate, so you can easily re-create an actual train from a specific day, or expand your fleet at any time.

The cars listed here were widely used on many UP trains — be sure to check out the complete series at walthers.com.

Did You Know?

Working crossing flashers will add a new level of realism to roads along your line. First introduced in the early 20th century, the red lamps made many grade crossings much safer for drivers and pedestrians.

A wide range of working models is available, along with the electronics needed to turn them on and off automatically. You'll also find all kinds of component parts, kits and assembled models that can be adapted to the needs of your railroad.
