HO SCALE

PROTO FASTFACTS™

In Service: 1949 – present

Variations: Slight changes during production; GP7 replaced by GP9 in 1954. Some equipped for passenger service.

Primary Assignment: Road freight and passenger service; later used on wayfreights and for switching. Many now used by shortlines.

EMD found exactly what railroads wanted in its new General Purpose series in 1949. Simple and rugged, the new GP7s weren't necessarily handsome, but in short order, buyers were using them for everything from road freights to commuter service. Production continued with minor changes (known as "phases") through 1954 when the more powerful GP9 was introduced. Reliable and versatile, many have lead long lives and are still working for shortlines and industrial operators.

ALCO RSC-2 HO SCALE

PROTO FASTFACTS™

In Service: 1946-early 70s

Variations: Six-axle version of RS-2 roadswitcher; some later rebuilt with 4-wheel trucks.

Primary Assignment: Branchline service.

As railroads began switching from steam to diesel power, many found the new engines were a bit too heavy for the lighter rail and bridges found on branchlines. To meet these operating conditions, ALCO offered buyers a six-axle version of its popular RS-2 roadswitcher, cataloged as the RSC-2, which spread the weight over more wheels.

Equally at home working freight and passenger runs, many were purchased for a specific branch where they spent most of their working lives.

USRA 0-8-0 STEAM LOCOMOTIVE

HO SCALE

PROTO FASTFACTS™

In Service: 1918-1950s

Variants: Numerous changes made to tenders and appliances after end of USRA control in 1920; copies built through early 1950s.

Primary Assignments: Yard switching and transfer service, also used as industrial switchers.

By 1917, the arrival of larger and much heavier freight cars had pushed most 0-6-0 designs to their limits. Realizing that railroads needed more powerful switchers, the United States Railway Administration developed plans for an all-new 0-8-0. Up-to-date in all respects, these big switchers were the equals in power of many road freight locomotives from just a few years earlier. The USRA 0-8-0 was well liked by railroads that received it and 175 were completed before government control ended in 1920. More success came in later years, as 35 different roads eventually copied the design. In fact, the last new steam locos built in the U.S. were a series of 0-8-0s, constructed by the N&W in 1951-53 that followed the general outline of the decades-old USRA design.

EMD GP18 DIESEL LOCOMOTIVE

N SCALE

EMD GP18

In Stock • $89.98 Each

PROTO FASTFACTS™

In Service: 1959-present on short lines and as yard slugs.

Primary assignment: Road freight service.

Variations: Built in high- and short-hood versions.

Although EMD had been the last major builder to introduce a hood unit diesel, its GP7 proved to be exactly what many railroads were looking for. In turn, the GP7 was replaced by the more powerful GP9, and in 1959, the 1800-horsepower GP18 took its place. All three models shared the same basic and boxy but practical styling. The two 48" radiator fans found on late production GP9s were carried over to the roof of the GP18, but these new models had metal grids over the air intakes, replacing the so-called chicken wire screens used on the GP7 and 9. By this time the market was beginning to move in two directions and EMD responded with two models, the GP18, and the 2000-horsepower GP20 for roads that wanted faster, stronger units for important mainline service. The GP18 remained in production until 1963 when it was replaced by the GP28 with its completely restyled 35-Line body.

NEW N USRA 0-8-0 - Standard DC

PROTO N Heritage Steam Collection from Walthers. Based on WW I-era models operated by over 35 different railroads, copies of the USRA 0-8-0s were also among the last steamers built in the US. Perfect for switching on steam- and transition-era layouts, these detailed models feature a flywheel-equipped drive and powerful, skew-wound motor for smooth operation. Locomotives come equipped with an eight-pin DCC socket for easy decoder installation (decoder sold separately), traction tires for greater pulling power (a non-tire equipped driver set is also included for those who do not want this feature) and Accumate knuckle couplers.

New Arrival!

920-75121 Series New Roadnames $99.98 Each

PROTO FASTFACTS™

In Service: 1946-early 70s; several preserved units

Variations: Most built to run long-hood forward. Some fitted with steam generators for passenger service. Many owners later replaced original air-cooled turbochargers with water-cooled style. Railroad-specific appliances.

Primary Assignment: Road freight and secondary passenger service; later used as yard switchers. Many “retired” units were sold to industrial and shortline operators.

Alco's first roadswitcher to incorporate its new 244-Series prime mover, the 1,500-horsepower RS-2 was equally at home working road freights or switch runs. If equipped with a steam generator, they were also found on commuter and secondary passenger runs. Production began in 1946 and just over 350 were built for U.S. and Canadian roads before the introduction of the RS-3 in 1950. Over the next two decades, RS-2s worked for Class I, shortline and industrial operations across the continent and one survivor still held down daily freight duties in 2007. A few others still see service at museum and tourist lines.

PROTO Fastfacts™

In Service: 1952 - early 80s; First unit (EMD Demonstrator #990, sold to SP in 1953, #5308; later #1518) preserved.

Variations: Built with and without dynamic brakes; railroad-specific appliances.

Primary Assignments: Local and branchline freight.

Originally intended for use on branch lines, EMD launched its Special Duty series in 1952 with the SD7. This loco also introduced the three-axle Flexi-Coil truck with its powered center axle. This was a major departure from earlier three-axle designs where an unpowered center axle was used to spread the engine's weight over more wheels, reducing the strain on the lighter rail and lower capacity bridges found on branches. EMD's design not only spread the weight but the extra traction motors provided more power to get trains started. The SD's longer trucks required a longer frame, and buyers could also specify a heavier frame for engines working transfers and other low speed service. Somewhat underpowered with only 1500 horsepower (same as a four-axle GP7), only 188 SD7s were built from February of 1952 through November of 1953; the more powerful SD9 was introduced the following January.
