Update

Vintage Detail in a Small Scale

The new Atlas N Scale Mogul is what modelers think of when they picture an 1800s-era steam locomotive. Known for their small size and elaborate paint schemes complete with gold-leaf lettering and trim, diminutive 2-6-0s were equally suited for freight or passenger trains. The earliest 2-6-0s were built in 1863 by the Rogers Locomotive Works in Paterson, New Jersey, and over the next 50 years an estimated 11,000 were constructed by several manufacturers.

2-6-0 Mogul Locomotive; 223-41600 Undecorated

The new Atlas 2-6-0 Moguls are replicas of these 1800s gems. Dressed in colorful 1880s-era schemes, these smooth-running models feature a separately applied bell, metal handrails and Rapido-style couplers. With their fine detailing and decoration, these new models will bring early steam-era railroading to your layout.

G39B 77-TON ORE CAR - HO SCALE

Stewart Hobbies' latest freight cars are modeled after the 1960s-era solid-floored, rotary-dump cars used by the Pennsy and its successors to haul iron ore from Great Lakes ports to inland steel mills in Pennsylvania and Ohio. They were also used to haul steel coils and scrap. After several years of service, some G39s had their Crown trucks replaced with more modern trucks. This allowed for a capacity increase to 77 tons, and accordingly the cars were given the G39B designation.

A Place for your Modern Steam Power

Locomotive servicing facilities were fascinating places to watch as steam engines were serviced between runs. An army of workers would attend to the big machines by coaling, watering, oiling and inspecting them from coupler to coupler. There was always plenty going on and if you wanted to see locomotives, there was no better location. The Locomotive Servicing Facility Series of structures brings the excitement of a bustling terminal for large, modern steam locos to your HO Scale pike.

The Bigger the Better

The long trains, heavier cars and faster schedules of the post-World War I era demanded locomotives of ever-increasing size. Prior to 1920, 2-8-2s were among the largest locomotives. New designs for larger locos quickly swept the industry and before long 4-8-4, 2-10-2 and articulateds like the 4-6-6-4 Challengers took to the rails.

Along with these glorious machines came the need for facilities capable of handling larger power; older 90' turntables and 100' roundhouses were simply too small.

Railroads began building modern facilities capable of handling everything from tiny 0-4-0s to huge articulateds. Roundhouse stalls up to 125' could accommodate articulated locos, and turntables as large as 130' became common. But engine length continued to climb and soon 125' stalls were too short. Rather than replace relatively new roundhouses, railroads simply extended a few stalls to handle even larger engines like 4-6-6-4s, 2-8-8-2s and Big Boy 4-8-8-4s. These complex machines also needed on-the-spot repairs—it took too long to send them to the system backshop—so most roundhouses had an attached machine shop that could handle most repairs short of an overhaul.

Additional Kits that'll add Realism to your Servicing Scene

Here are a few model suggestions. In most cases you'll need only one of each building. It's up to you to decide which fit your scene best:

Manufacturer	Product Name	Part Number	Notes
Peco	Inspection Pit	552-121129	(includes Code 75 rail)
Faller	Inspection Pits	272-120136
Walthers	Golden Valley Freight House	933-2821, 2827 or 2828	Use as storehouse
Grandt Line	Corrugated Iron Warehouse	300-5906	Use as storehouse
Woodland Scenics	Diesel Fuel Facility	785-232
Stewart Products	Diesel Oil Storage Tank & Pump House	683-107
American Model Builders	IC Type B Depot	152-124	Use as office/crew room
Design Preservation Models	C. Smith Packing House	243-203	Use as office/crew room
Walthers	Industrial Storage Tanks	933-3514

Other facilities were also modernized to handle the big engines and to speed servicing. Bigger coaling towers were necessary—150-ton models were replaced by huge 400-ton or larger concrete monoliths capable of filling tenders on three or four locos at once. Cinder conveyors were modernized and mechanized for increased speed and sanding facilities received upgrades and new towers that could serve two or more tracks.

While most steam servicing facilities continued to grow at a furious pace until after World War II, diesels were making inroads. That diesel fueling column on “track one” soon had company on the other tracks. In many cases, however, the servicing facility scene changed little for decades after the last steamers were off to the scrapyard—the roundhouse, machine shop, turntable and sanding facility were still necessities and the monumental coaling towers remained standing stripped of their metal hardware.

Steam's Glory and Twilight on your Railroad

Locomotive Servicing Facility
Series structures mimic the huge buildings erected when steam was at its zenith, making it easy to add a busy, fascinating scene to your layout.

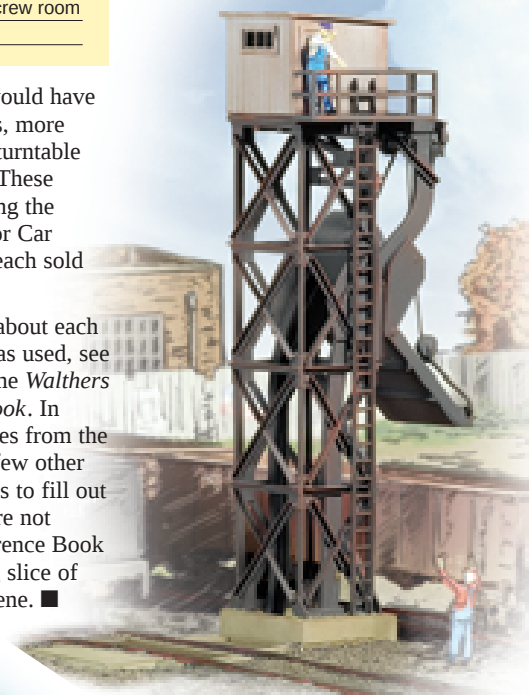

While most major terminals were huge, the accompanying track diagram will fit in a four-foot-wide space with room for a mainline track on one side (not shown).

As diesels became more prevalent after 1940, many roads added a diesel fueling rack as shown on one servicing track. In operation, diesels could be inspected, fueled, washed, sanded and turned, if necessary, avoiding the roundhouse altogether.

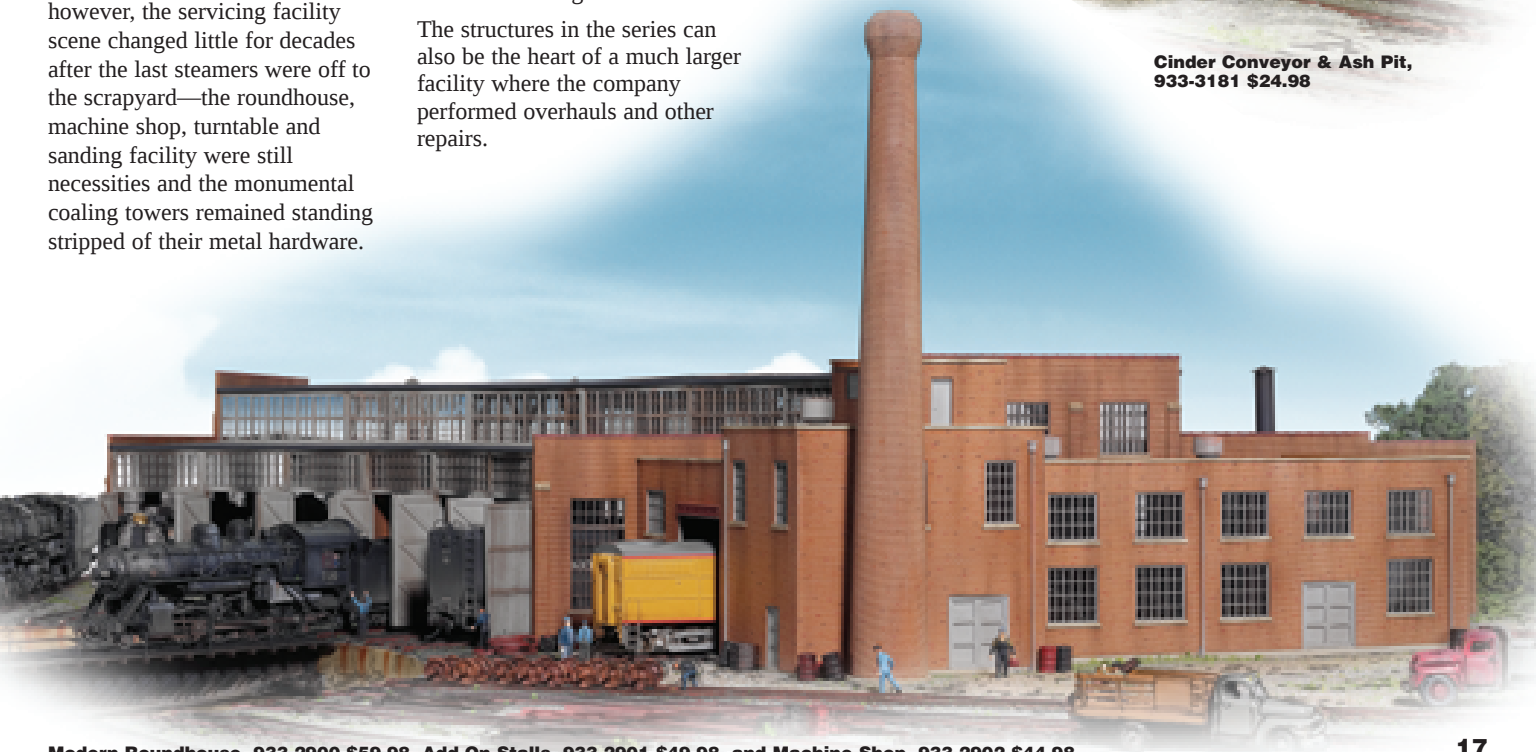

The structures in the series can also be the heart of a much larger facility where the company performed overhauls and other repairs.

Such large terminals would have more roundhouse stalls, more whisker tracks off the turntable and the system shops. These are easily modeled using the Backshop, 933-3039, or Car Shop, 933-3040, kits, each sold separately.

For more information about each structure and how it was used, see the special section of the Walthers 2004 HO Reference Book. In addition to the structures from the series, we've added a few other outbuildings and details to fill out the scene. While they're not mentioned in the Reference Book piece, they'll add a big slice of authenticity to your scene. ■

the modeling stop

The track and structure arrangement is adapted from the recommended practices of the American Railway Association in the 1920s. As shown, this complex is ideal for turning locos and getting them back on the road. We've filled out the scene with a few additional structures and added a diesel fueling facility for the transition era.

Here's a look at the diorama used to display the series. The size is 4 x 8' and the scene includes a Steel Water Tank and Backshop.

Unload 'em Anywhere

Trinity RD[®]4 Coal Hoppers are popular with railroads, leasing companies and power plants because they can be unloaded two ways: bottom dumped while the train is still moving, or rotary dumped. The prototypes are equipped with both rapid-discharge bottom gates and rotary couplers, allowing unloading at power plants and ship transloading facilities almost anywhere.

Many power companies own fleets of coal gondolas or hoppers to service their plants; these cars, often of a single design, simply shuttle coal between mines or docks and generating stations. When more cars are needed to haul additional coal during peak demand or to fill in for delayed equipment, RD4s can be operated to almost any power plant.

Simulating unit coal train operations is easy with Walther's Trinity RD4 Coal Hoppers. The ready-to-run models come in six-packs with six different roadnumbers; two different roadnumber series are available for a total of 12 roadnumbers per roadname. Each set includes near-scale dummy knuckle couplers for intermediate cars and a working knuckle coupler on each end car. Individual undecorated cars are also available for those who wish to decorate their own models. ■

Grab Some Groceries

Every town has a “corner store,” even though few are actually on a corner. Just like today’s convenience stores, establishments like Tomaso’s Market were where the neighborhood shopped while “on the go.”

Occupying older storefronts, these businesses carried everything from pasta to shoe polish. Their owners knew their customers on a first-name basis and often carried specialty products that catered to the cultural make-up of their location. Many of these stores also captured the business of area workers and passers-by with freshly made hoagies or other specialties, cold pop and snacks—

a perfect lunch on the run for cab and bus drivers, delivery men and others just passing through.

Boasting colorful sale signs in the windows and occasional ads painted

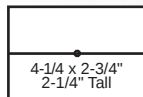

This store in Elizabeth, Illinois illustrates the look you can give the front windows by adding a few signs and interior details. The owners also tried to “modernize” the building with masonite panels. Photo by Bob Gallegos on the exterior walls, stores like the Tomaso’s Market Background Building kit add character to any scene. At less than two inches deep, it’ll fit between your rearmost track or scenery and your background, helping to make the transition between your 3-D scenery and painted or printed backdrop look more realistic.

The Tomaso’s Market kit includes the brick store facade with parts molded in appropriate colors and decals for several business names and painted wall advertising. By thinning the building from the rear, it’s easy to fit it into almost any space. The wall advertising graphics are easily trimmed to fit your selected building depth. Because many blocks have several similar storefront structures, using more than one kit in a scene is as easy as painting the buildings differently and adding different decals. ■

Need More Storage Space?

That’s the dilemma faced by many growing businesses. Buildings like the Co-Op Storage Shed were often the answer. Cheap and quick to build, wooden storage sheds were used by feed mills, oil dealers and many other businesses. Because they’re so common, these small trackside structures are naturals for adding realism along any siding. The Co-Op Storage Shed kit is patterned after prototypes used everywhere. The buildings were built on “stilts” to make the floor height even with box car floors and truck beds. Wood siding and a metal roof keep cargo out of the elements and sliding doors allow easy transfer of goods between trucks and box cars. On your layout, the Co-Op Storage Shed is a welcome addition along any siding. In some places, these small buildings are used as stand-alone facilities at team tracks. At feed mills and grain elevators they’re handy for bagged products; fuel dealers, railroads and industrial plants use them to receive oils, lubricants and chemicals in drums; and lumber yards use them to keep specialty woods and building materials under cover.

IHC Introduces A Classic

In the mid-1920s, freight locos with larger fireboxes supported by a four-wheel truck appeared. With these innovations, heavier trains could be moved at higher speeds. The ideas were tried with a new loco designed for passenger service, creating the 4-6-4. Known as "Hudsons," engines of this type were soon handling many of the nation's finest trains.

Now International Hobby Corporation pays tribute to the mighty 4-6-4 with a series of powered, ready-to-run HO Scale models. Each Premier Series engine features a pre-painted and lettered plastic and diecast body, working valve gear, extra pick-ups in the tenders, metal hand-rails, working headlights and Magic-Mate couplers.

Get Your HO Trains Up & Running!

381-3103 "World's Greatest Hobby" Track Pack, $198.00

If you've watched the World's Greatest Hobby video "Building Your First Layout," you've seen the impressive track set-up designed to demonstrate how to create a working HO Scale layout. Kato now makes a track pack that allows you to re-create this impressive design. It's a great set for beginners, but is also useful to more skillful hobbyists thanks to a variety of design options.

The "World's Greatest Hobby" Track Pack fits a 4 x 8' area, and can easily be expanded with the purchase of additional Unitrack System track sections, sold separately. The DCC-friendly set includes four manual turnouts, 13 straight sections of various sizes, 29 sections of 22.5° curved track (specially designed for this track pack), one feeder track section, a rerailer and an adapter cord.

Contains all the track needed to build the 4 x 8' layout, recommended as the best layout plan in the World's Greatest Hobby video "Building Your First Layout."
