NEW EMD GP9 Phase II Locomotive with Chopped Nose

ESU® LokSound 5 DCC

Standard DC

Check walthers.com for current pricing.

A must-have for modelers of the 1960s and later, this locomotive reflects a time when railroads upgraded and rebuilt older power as a cost-effective alternative to buying new. Many of these rebuild programs focused on the venerable EMD GP9, including units which were originally built between 1955 and 1957, referred to by railfans and modelers as Phase II. While these units retained their no-frills, utilitarian appearance, many were modified with chopped short hoods to improve forward visibility. Numerous examples remain in service today on shortlines, in industrial operations, and at museums. The WaltherMainline Phase II EMD GP9 with Chopped Nose is ideal for a wide range of assignments and features many realistic details, including:

- Scale width hood with correct contours
- With or without dynamic brakes as appropriate
- See-through steps
- Correct RP-25 metal wheels

 - 2 bells changeable by CVs

NEW NASA Rocket Booster Train

Check walthers.com for current pricing.

Did you know, some of our journeys to space begin with a much more grounded form of transportation? Add a truly unique operation to your layout today with the HO Scale NASA Solid Rocket Booster Train from Walther'sMainline. First introduced with the Space Shuttle program in 1981, NASA's rocket train was used to transport the solid rocket boosters from Morton Thiokol in Utah to the Kennedy Space Center in Florida. The train features heavy-duty, 4-truck flatcars that carry rocket components under protective hoods. Some of the cars that carry the SRB propellant have refrigeration units to keep the temperature constant. The train also includes spacer and clearance cars between the flatcars carrying the SRB components. While the original train was retired in 2011 with the retirement of the Space Shuttle, it was re-introduced in 2020 with the start of the Artemis lunar program, delivering the SRB components for the Space Launch System rocket.
